1. Does each program have to contextualize the University's SLO rubrics?

No. The rubric was developed for undergraduate programs so it is completely suitable 'as is' for them, and some graduate programs may also find that it is appropriate to use as well. However, many graduate programs will want to contextualize the rubric to make it more appropriate for meet their unique disciplines and levels. Download the handout about how to contextualize and use the university's SLO rubrics¹.

2. What should programs do that currently do not have any oral presentations for students?
